Brett Roland Named ADESA Senior Vice President of Real Estate, Construction and Facilities

Carmel, IN—ADESA today announced Brett Roland has been named senior vice president of real estate, construction and facilities, effective immediately. He most recently worked for Duke Realty Company in Indianapolis, where he served in the role of vice president of construction and development.

“Brett brings more than 21 years of industry experience as well as extensive knowledge in the areas of development, leasing, acquisitions and dispositions,” said Warren Byrd, ADESA executive vice president of corporate development. “We’re excited to have Brett on board. His expertise will be a great asset in guiding the expansion, renovation and construction of ADESA sites nationwide.”

During his time at Duke Realty Company, Roland managed the retail division’s leasing, construction site acquisitions, dispositions and project teams. He has also held various management construction positions for companies along the East and West coasts, and even founded and developed his own construction services company.

Roland holds a bachelor’s degree in construction engineering from East Tennessee State University in Johnson City, Tenn. He has also continued his education in the area of real estate at Johns Hopkins University.
